Setablished April, 1881. The El Paso Herald includes also, by absorption and succession, The Daily News, The Telegraph, The Telegram, The Tribuna, The Graphic, The Sun, The Advertiser, The Independent, The Journal, The Republican, The Bulletin.

MEMBER ASSOCIATED PRESS AND AMEH. NEWSP. PUBLISHERS' ASSOC.

Dedicated to the service of the people, that no good cause shall lack a champion, and that evil shall not thrive unopposed.

The Daily Herald is issued six days a week and the Weerly Herald is published every Thursday, at El Paso. Jexas; and the Sunday Mail Edition is also sent to Weekly Subscribers.

Society Reporter 1019
Advertising department 116 TMLETHONES.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION. Daily Herald, per month, suc. per pear, $7. Weekly Herald, per year, $2. The Daily Herald in delivered by carriers in El Paso, East El Paso, Fort Blisc and Towne. Texas, and Cindad Juarez, Mexico, at 60 cents a month.

A subscriber destring the address on his paper changed will please state in his communication boin the old and the new address.

Eubscribers falling to get The Heraid promptly should call at the office of telephone No. 115 before 6:20 p. m. all complaints will receive prompt atten-tion.

GUARANTEED

CIRCULATION. The Herald bascs all advertising contracts on a guarantee of more than twice the circulation of any other El Paso, Arizona, New Mexico or west Texas paper. Dally average exceeding 10,000

The Association of American Advertisers has examined and certified to the circulation of this publication. The detail report of such examin nation is on file at the York office of the Association. No other figures of circulation guaranteed.

HERALD TRAV-ELING AGENTS. Persons solicated to subscribe for The Herald should beware of imposters and should not pay money to anyone unless he can show that he is legally authorized by the El Paso Herald.

El Paso's 325th Annual Fair

REPARATIONS are well in hand for El Paso's Annual Fair to be held October 29 to November 6. Men are on the road representing the several departments. There will be a splendid exhibit of manufactures, mining, agriculture, live stock, machinery, merchandise, poultry, pets, and people. Last year's fair was extensive and highly educative, but this year's will be better by far, and thrice as big.

The list of prizes is unequaled anywhere in the southwest. The exhibits will come from everywhere, and the interest is keen and widespread. All that will be needed to make the occasion one of inestimable Amportance to all the people of the Great Southwest will be to have those people attend in person and take back home some of the inspiration of their visit and of the contact with other live ones.

The amusement feature has received special attention. One of the biggest and best amusement aggregations in the world will open the show, and this ought to give the fair a bangup sendoff. Then there will be a continuous revelry of fun and frolic, with plenty of free entertainment for everybody, and weather that can't be beat anywhere in the universe.

This is the 325th annual El Paso Fair and Great Central Market-a revival of the ancient festival of the Spaniards and the aborigines in the days before Plymouth Rock and Jamestown were discovered by the tourist agencies. The Prusic of the spheres is none too good for El Paso, and it has been engaged for the week at a fabulous price. Here where the great trails cross is the real focus. Everybody come, and we'll send you home filled with good things.

Governor Campbell insists that he would find a way to enforce a state prohibition law in every corner of the state; but what would Colquitt do about it?

They are raising sacred cattle in Texas. Might save them to furnish food for tent evangelists.

The Jashing automobile girl in flowing veil and picture hat whom your meet on the bridge as she rolls across the line into the United States may in fact be an unlicenesed Chinaman whom the chauffeur is smuggling across the line. This trick has been worked with success in many cases at the border near San Diego. The women in automobile parties crossing the line into the United States hereafter may expect to be asked to remove their veils.

El Paso the Educational Center

WITH the opening of the El Paso School for Girls, El Paso now has the best rounded system of education to be found. west. Few cities in the United States surpass El Paso in per capita expenditure for maintaining the public school system; El Paso now has a thoroughly equipped private school of highest standards for girls, and a military school for boys, while the parochial schools with their very large attendance are constantly improving their facilities.

In the public schools manual training and domestic science are given great prominence, and in the private schools the courses of study and exercise are shaped especially for the needs of our own sons, and daughters in preparing them for useful and happy lives.

El Paso is the logical metropolis of an immense area in the southwest, and there is no reason why there should not be regularly a winter colony of hundreds of families here to educate the children.

Whenever California can't get into the papers in any other way, it is always possible to dig up an earthquake in some part of the state.

San Angelo is calling itself the metropolis of west Texas, quite ignoring the primacy of El Paso 400 miles further west.

To appreciate fully the blessings of a rapidly growing city one must have a screeching donkey engine under his bedroom window with shouting crews of cement workers busy 24 hours a day and Sundays. No one need ever be in doubt that El Paso's progress is genuine and continuous. If you persist in dishelieving in the reality of El Paso's prosperity you must put cotton in your ears to be consistent, otherwise you cannot shut out the merry song of the circular saw, the hammer and the concrete mixer.

For Boy Scouts In El Paso

N LINE with its characteristic enterprise The Herald has purchased the exclusive rights of publication of the Manual of the Boy Scouts' organisation prepared by Gen. Sir Robert Baden Powell and Ernest Thompson Seton.

The Boy Scout movement has taken hold with surprising strength throughout England and the British colonies and the movement has begun in America under the most favorable auspices, so that it appears certain the United States will have a strong body of Boy Scouts within the next few months.

Every boy will want to read the Manual of the Boy Scouts as published in The Herald beginning soon. The articles will describe fully the laws of the scouts, the rules for scouting, woodcraft, camping, and scout games and drills. There will be lessons in signaling, in scouting, camping, shooting, tent building, riding the construction of useful things, the study of nature, geology, photography, etc., and a fascinating account of the organization with the use of patrol

The Panama canal should be fortified by the United States independently of any agreement or understanding with other nations. This is a case where cooperation is emphatically not a wise policy. The canal furnishes the key to our whole system of coast defence, and now that we have punched a hole through the wall we must certaintly protect the door against hostile approach.

Men may honestly differ over policies of government. Your neighbor is not necessarily a crook because he sees things at a little different slant from yourself. There can be no compromise as to principles; but programs, to be efficient and practical, must in fact be a series of compromises.

A teacher of oratory says that the first and most important rule for orators is "that they should stop talking before they stop thinking." The same rule might apply to others than orators.

U NCLE WALTS Denatured Poem

HE red man of the olden days, of whom the gifted Cooper wrote, roam through the silent woodland ways, and scalped a gent, or cut his throat. Remote, majestic and severe, he scorned the pulsface and his wiles, and it was not for gin or heer the red man walked the forest aisles. The foeman heard his battle screech and thought it wise to take a walk; and when Lo had to make a speech, he beat Dan Webster half a block. O, he was then a seing bold, the hero of a world romance; sublime he stood, in blanket rolled, among his cousins and his aunts. Alas! the red man of today no longer roams the virgin parks; he's thrown the tomahawk away, and joined the tribe of easy marks. No more he trails the paleface down, and hangs a scalp-lock in his lair;

INDIAN

be hunts the paleface in the town, and buys gold bricks and heated air. No more the red men sternly stand, and breathe defiance to their fees; they're busy trading cash and land for chalk and string, and things like those. No more, for wigwam and for squaw, Lo seeks the thickest of the strife; he hires some man who deals in law, and gives a mortgage on his life. No Cooper could a hero find, among the red men of today; some notary, with legal mind, might write their

Copyright, 1910, by George Marchews Adams.

Was Mason

Dorothy Dix ON WOMAN'S

Woman has no qualms of conscience in appropriating anything that she can label "souvenir" while she would never think of taking money she handles. Article No. 2-Telling of woman's attitude to "souvenirs" and when she plays bles a woman, who esteems herself the soul of honor and honesty, to smuggle, without in any way doing riolence to her conscience.

It is an ethical phenomenon that is other peculiarity of woman's conscience remarkable and equally unexclainable, is that women are enabled suffers no social ostracism. almly and deliberately to commit a line of petty thefts under certain condiin their own sight.

With a woman the name "souvenir" is a mantle that throws a rosy negis over any kind of stealing that is done something else, she hasn't the slightest | known. compunction in appropriating the said

That the women who pilfer from hotels and sleeping cars and such places do not consider themselves thieves needs no other proof than that the souvenir robber has no shame in telling you of her depredations, and exhibiting her booty to you.

It is a sight to make moralists shudder and the cynical laugh to see a woman, who is rich enough to travel over the whole world and to stop at the very best and most expensive places, bring out, for instance, her collection of souyou that they bear the St. Regis, the Ritz-Carlton, the Ponce de Leon and such costly hotel names plainly marked upon them. Every souvenir is the visible evidence of a theft, and yet she is not trying to conceal them, but is flaunting them before your face.

Why Did She Steal Them?

Why did she steal them? Not neces-"Is she a kleptomaniac?" you ask Has she an irresponsible mania for stealing things, and had you best keep your jewelry locked up, and your hand on your pocketbook while you are in her house?

from you. She is a woman of the highest principle, a philanthropist, a church worker an influence for good in the community, and she would be horrified at the mere suggestion that she was not the very soul of honesty.

Yet those souvenirs, those salt shakwith the crests of various restaurants on them-how are you going to reconile them with her conscience? You don't, and you dare not ask her how she does. It remains one of the impenetrable feminine mysteries. Just how widespread, among women, is the form of petty larceny euphoniously called "collecting souvenirs" is shown by the fact that all hotels and restaurants experience an annual loss of thousands of dollars this way, and recently after a ladies' day at a smart club in a large city it was found that not a single after dinner coffee spoon

Horrifled at Name of "Thief."

Yet there had been no women present except the wives and daughters and sweethearts and friends of the men who compose the club. Most respectable, most eminent women, all of them, and not one who wouldn't have swooned with horror had any one called her a thief, even when she was caught with the goods on her.

Then kindly observe, as another eccentricity of the way the feminine conscience works, the manner in which women cheat at cards, and other women sn't a bridge whist club in existence will have to let it go at that,

I was mad, but knew better than to not attached to the legation, his wife's close relationship to the Austrian roy-city. Although the prince was soon get a chance to revenge myself.

The Peacock Feather

W E spoke yesterday of the where some member is not known to strange peculiarity that ena-

She has been caught at her tricks but does this horrify the other women so that they rise up holdly and cast her out? Not at all. They watch her as well as they can, and try to keep her as common as it is unexplainable. An- hands off the puncher, but that is all. They "my dear" her, and go to her par- as Hiram Cronk, the last survivor will ties, and invite her to theirs, and she

And the woman takes her crime—the the Grand Army encampment parade crime for which men have the ugliest tions, and yet remain perfectly honest word in the language-equally lightly as the other women do, and it never occurs to her to put herself in the same category as the blackleg gambler who stacks the cards, with whom no gentlein its name, and as long as she doesn't | men would play, and who could by no take a thing because she really needs it possibility get across the threshold of a but because it will remind her of gentlemen's club, if his character were

The fact that women are the chief unugglers, that they pilfer from hotels and cheat at cards would seem to indicate that they were less honest than men, and had a less keen sense of honor; but this is not true. The marvel of the whole matter is that when it comes to handling money and dealing with things of intriusic value women are nuch more honest than men.

There is a reason why, in almost every store in the land, there are women cashiers. It is because the contents of the till are sacred from the girl's fin venirs and vaingloriously point out to gers, as they are not from the boy's A prominent banker in this city, who has subsituted women cashiers for men, says that he has never lost a penny because of dishonesty since he put the women in, and he was never able to prevent losses while he had men handling the money.

All employers of women bear testimo ny to their honesty and conscienticusness as a class, and it is also true that a woman who has the handling of money, and is personally responsible seldom incurs a debt that she cannot pay, or skips her rent or beats tradespeople. Most of the bad debts on merchants' books were made by mea or by some Not at all. She would never dream of woman who expected her husband to

The confidential clerk who goes wrong, the embezzler, the bookkeeper who makes crooked accounts, the employe who speculates with the firm's money, is almost invariably a man. The all Paris. vomen in such places have clean hands. Their consciences would receil rs, napkins, after dinner coffee spoons from the very thought of robbing the cash drawer or faisifying their accounts, though it would be perfectly serene under the ordeal of getting in a dozen pairs of gloves without paying duty or taking home a cute little mustard pot in the front of their blouses from a restaurant.

All of which leads to the inference that women are not less honest than men, but differently honest-that they have not less conscience than men, but that their conscience acts along differ-

Why She Robs the Government, ' Perhaps, also, women can never es-reason they are enabled to steal from press. the government and a hotel or railroad, while they will not from an individual, is because the government and the railroad and the hotel remain vague and intangible to them-a sort of providence that can't be robbed, whereas, they have an acute sense of the enormity of taking things from the store of Mr. Brown or Mr. Smith.

However, there is no disputing the fact that the feminine conscience is a fearful and wonderful thing, and that it moves at an unguessable tangent incondone the offense. There probably stead of along straight lines. And we

The Herald's

Daily Short Story

Grand Army Of the Republic " Meets In Atlantic City, N. J.

RANKS THINNING RAPIDLY.

By Frederic J. Haskin

TODAY the survivors of the host; concerned, fell through, but there is of "boys who were the blue" in still hope on the part of many that it the stormy times of '61 to '65 are may yet be realized, and that the year descending upon Atlantic City, the oc-1915, the anniversary of the surrencasion being the forty-fourth annual der at Appomattox, may signalize this encampment of the Grand Army of the final and highest evidence of com-Eight different organiza- plete reunion. There is also considerable agitation for a reunion on the tions will open their conventions in connection with the meeting of the (). Held of Gettysburg of the men woh The Woman's Relief Corps; the participated in the gallant charge of Pickett and those who fought so val-Ladies' Auxiliary of the Sons of Veterans; the Daughters of Veterans; the lantly in repulsing them. It is proposed that this reunion shall take place Sons of Veterans; the National Association of Civil War Musicians; the La- during the first days of July, 1913, fifty dies of the G. A. R.; the National As- Fears after the close of that great struggle. sociation of Army Nurses of the Civil Another issue that will occupy the War, and the National Naval/Veteran's association. These various organiza- attention of the Grand Army encamptions represent almost every department is the question of the statue of Robert E. Lee in the capital of the ment of the military life that repre-United States. There is a strong facsented the Union cause from 1861 to tion in the Grand Army which bitterly opposes its presence there, and it will Encampment Big Event. endeavor to have official record made Of course the big event of the week of its opposition. The other faction will be the Grand Army encampment believes that the passing of rearly proper. It is the intention of the vafifty years should be a sufficient rious associations and organizations to lapse of time to warrant forgetfulness have these annual meetings simultaneof the bitter past, and that Virginia ously as long as there are enough can attest her loyalty to the Union in Grand Army men left to hold annual no better way than by placing one of encampments. That there will be many its most sacred effigies in the capitol years of encampments is shown by of the nation. They hold that in all the fact that there are 240,000 memmatters where the south shows a wiftbers of the Grand Army still surviving, ingness to forget the humiliation of and about 380,000 survivors of the Civil the past, it discloses a tendency that war. The last soldier of the war of should be met in like spirit by the 1812 was Hiram Cronk, who died only They also feel that it is for the a few years ago. If any of those who Grand Army to be as generous today fought in the Civil war live as long as Grant was at Appomattox, or as Lincoln was when he sought to bind die in 1958, or practically a half cenup the wounds of the past, "with tury from the present time. Of course malice towards none and charity for small in comparison with that of today, An effort will be made to raise more funds for the decoration of the graves of northern soldiers who lie buried in national cemeteries in the southern states. Out of the 400,060 soldiers who are buried in national cemeteries, about a quarter of a million are in cemeteries situated in states that were out of the Union during the Civil war. The Grand Army posts in those states are naturally very weak. To the credit of the south it may be said that they have assisted in the decoration of these graves, but there is still much to be desired, and the Grand the survivors of the northern and the Army seeks to supply the necessary funds for what it considers to be ade quate decoration.

To Decorate Graves.

southern armies, betokening the fact It is no empty figure to speak of the rapidly thinning ranks of the G. A. R., for the annual death list among its membership approximates 10,000, More in that conflict use now equally zealous in maintaining the integrity of the than 15,000 of those who fought in the country and thanking God that the northern army during the Civil war Stars and Stripes float over a Union annually cross the river to the great bivounc of the dead. Despite the sition, so far as the present year is that the government has been liberal just as that of today is small in com-

Work of Reunion.

brought up at the forthcoming encampment. At various times in late years here have been reunions of Civil war veterans where the man who wore the blue and he who wore the gray have fraternized as brothers, each honest in his conviction that his cause was just.

Not long ago it was suggested that during the present year there should be held in Washington a reunion of all that the issues that divided the two ections during the Civil war are dead and buried forever, and that those who ranged themselves on either side that shall endure forever. The propoparison with that of twenty-five years

Many interesting questions will be

"Then," I said, "you went back to the prefect.' "How do you know" he snapped, with an air of defiance. "I can guess that, of course. The workman gave him the description of certain peculiarities that would make it possible to pinch the thief." "You just hit it, but you have a rather sudden way of bursting into a fel-We had another drink and parted the best of friends.

me of the affair. He was worried about Crenard, who wanted to arrest "Oh." I said, "the man who solved the Lilas mystery knows his business, "Do you know, he has asked me sev eral times to put you on the case with

"That's a regular mania of his. A man as smart as he is does not need anybody's help."

I let five more days pass. The whole press was making fun of the police. The eyes of all Europe were upon us. I went about a good deal; was seen both at Belleville and at the northern railroad station. Railroad stations are peculiar places; you see all kinds of people there-Englishmen, Dutchmen, Germans. I even saw brince Polt there-without the prinape from the personal element, and the cess-he was waiting for the Calais ex-

One evening when I came home found Cronard at my house. He had been waiting for me for two hours. "Now, Bartold," he said, holding out his hand, "won't you let bygones be bygones? I am all played out. I will let you have the whole reward; twenty-five thousand plunks."

"I will take it, if you will give up "How can I?

"You have bitten off more than you He glared at me fiercely, but then fissed: "Let's go see the prefect. Although it was late, the prefect received us immediately. He said only two words: "The diamonds." "Mr Cronard is sick." I said; "he would like a little rest. 'And you will take his place, Bartold?"

"Yes, if you will permit me. "Of course. Cronard certainly needs rest and it will help to placate public opinion; he has had poor luck. 1 hope you won't draw the matter out, Bartold.

"You can close it up tonight, sir." "Tonight!" "Yes."

erson who has the diamonds." "You are a devil Bartold."

cases." "You don't mean to say you call in great complications in criminal diamonds. mean; I have searched everywhere, in he theaters, in the bars, in the and found nothing." I noticed the shade of difference in still I will produce the diamonds in-'And I have searched nowhere and > "I will believe it when I see it." "If the prefect will permit you to stay here, you will see it, all right," Come on, Bartold," cried the prefect gleefully. Don't let us waste any more words. I will telephone to the prince, who is a most pleasant man too hard on my men." An hour later I brought in a pale home.

'he has no chance to get The prince was there, I thought he would have fallen from his chair.
"Here is your thie," said the pre-

> The man looked at me as if to ask for mercy. I went towards the prince. "May we announce in the papers tomorrow that you have found your diamonds at the bottom of a drawer?" 'How," asked the prefect.

"Please let him answer," I interrupted.

"Yes," the prince stammered, "that veterans are admitted with their will be all right." The prefect understood that it was that he found the veterans in these the prince himself who had taken the homes more contented than in any othdiamonds and that the poor workingman was his dupe rather than his no-

Then turning to me he continued: "I congratulate you, Bertold. Cropard is tired, we will give him another to those who defended it in the sixties. there is still occasion for charity among the old soldlers, and the G. A. R. annually dispenses more than $100 .-000 in that direction. The Grand Army has nearly a million dollars cash in hand, and property of an aggregate value of $2,622,000.

Abe Martin

We kin git a purty fair idea o' some folks by th' amount o' writin' they try t' git on a pustal card. If at first you don't succeed don't succumb.

While the G. A. R. has officially eschewed politics, it has been the greatest factor in securing the liberal pension system which enables the old soldiers to live in comparative ease and comfort. The government has spent more than $3,000,000,000 for their support. In 1989 there were 66,000 claims for new pensions presented at the pension office and 45,000 of these were allowed. Last year the Grand Army declared that the agitation for increased pensions should be brought to an end for several years. The newspapers got it "three years," and there was considerable stir among the old soldiers. It is thought that from this time on the annual pension budget will be decreased each year, as death is taking large toll from the list of survivors each month.

Complaints at Soldiers Homes.

Every now and then the country hears many complaints from the old soldlers who are inmates of the Soldiers' Homes of the country. These complaints are with reference to the food, as well as accommodations. While Henry M. Nevius was commander in chief of the G. A. R. he made a careful investigation of the homes and declared that he found them all that could e desired. He was not able even to locate the anonymous complainants. It was said not long ago by a veteran who spends a part of his time in the Soldiers' Homes that he has found the accommodation fully up to the standard of the average small hotel throughout the country. There are 55,000 veterans in the ten national and thirty state homes in the United States. In the national homes the expenditures amount to $232.63 per capita per year. In several states there are homes where the ers he visited. Many Lost Lives.

wives, and commander Nevius declares

In April 1865 more than a million men were in the military service of the United States. A still larger number had been enroled, had served their time, and had been discharged prior to that date. More than 350,000

(Continued on Next Page).

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Say This Is Woman's

Copyright, 1910, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

a portion of their conversation.

go home to her. "Of course I am offtimes obliged to her own exertions for a livelihood. She was a refined and sensitive woman, yet she did not suffer from loneliness or "Telephone to prince Poll to came self pity, and it was difficult for her to and see you and I will produce the feel much sympathy for the beloved wife of a good man dwelling in a comfortable home and not obliged to worry

Hundreds of Such Wives. In talking with another friend re-

Think of all the things a woman, might do to fill her hours pleasantly. There is the beautifying of her home, day and evening, began to experiment same time. found the study so fascinating and the talk to a man continually about what work so easy, and so inexpensive, that you are doing; but if you are occuit resulted in her making her home a pied, and interested in your occupabower of beauty. It became the center tions, you will, quite unconsciously to and who has told me right along I for people with artistic tastes and gave your self, perhaps, become entertainher woman's best happiness, the pride ing. You will know how to talk and the world at small cost. She can read and store her mind with the treasures of human thought. She can fit herself to converse sensibly and understandingly on any tonic-history blography. literature or art, as she may choose to select her reading matter. Then, there are the languages to be studied, and music and art.

There are innumerable other things a Give and you shall receive.

would pass, she wishes each day were

"I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister," should be the motto nities for women as it is today. It is a shameful thing for any woman to say that she is lonely or that she es not know what to do with her-never find people anxious to entertain woman will find everybody at her beck occupied woman.

al family made the robbery of the diation first and was good enough to tell monds an affair of the first magnithis case simple," cried Cronard. "I me he felt sure the robbers were soon The telephone wires were kept turned every pavingblock in Paris uphot the whole morning following the to be caught. I answered that nothing would please me more, as the servants crime. The perfect sent for Cronard, "But the streets are not paved with are always apt to be suspected in cases who immediately went to Place Beauof this kind. But we all knew each vor, from where he returned with the "Oh, you know very well what I most accurate information,

> I took good care to keep quiet. The prefect had me on an unimportant case, which did not require much skill. He spoke to me of the diamonds, but in his usual good natured way. "Why," I said, "you have put Crotake him long to get hold of the fel-Inwardly I chuckled and felt sure ronard would make a mess of it, as he did whenever he tackled anything himnard on that case, and I bet it won't own book, out to the Poli mansion, an at Folic Mericourt. We hurried there. old palatial building in the Taubourg. When we left the house my master HEN I had cleared up the Lilas impregnable like fortresses, but soon mystery and caught the cul-prit Cronard, the chief thanked me in a dark corner, accepted the as transparent to you as glass. I found the key to the whole mystery in a litcongratulations of the minister of justle shop near by, kept by a little man tice and gave himself the whole credit from Auvergue, who sold wine under when telling the story to the reporters: cover of selling wood. The servants say anything, and only hoped I would from the mansion came there often less to drink than to have a friendly chat and smoke a pipe, They were all very The chance came soon enough with outspoken. I made the acquaintance the theft oft he diamonds of princess Poli, one of the richest foreign ladies of the coachman, a fine fellow, who was very fond of his master. He told me everything about the theft.

"Monsieur was all upset." he said. He made me drive to the pelice sta-We are five Italians and four French, all model servants. The princess is very good to us and very much loved-the prince also," his expression. I had long known the side an hour." prince to amble, and also that he had an unpleasant adventure with an actress, a revolver shot I think, but the bullet just grazed his scalp. Though these details came high, I did not stop but urged the man to go on,

"When we left the prefect, the prince wanted to see the jeweler who had just repaired the necklace. The jeweler Having plenty of time I went, on my gave him the address of a workman At first sight these big mansions seem was radiant: 'We have him now,' he

The next day the prefect spoke to "A dirty affair," he murmured. "This must not come out."

You will take this." This is how I got my revenge.

SITTING in an elevated train, di- woman can do, in these days, to pass rectly behind two well-dressed and her time agreeably and advantageousclean-shaved men, a lady overheard ly. Libraries supply the best books of

One man said to his friend: "You look a bit down in the mouth; what is the matter with you?" The friend replied: I am down in the mouth and down in the heart; you know how hard I have been working to get a nice little home for my wife and myself. Well, I got it. I have her settled very cosily and comfortably, so it seems to me. The moment I am through with my work, I work late. I go home tired and glad to find the shelter of my home, but I find my wife either in tears or on the verge of tears. She complains of being so very lonely; she does not know people; her days are so long, and when I leave her in the morning it is with the feeling that I have put her in prison instead of in a happy home. I am worried to death about it, and I don't know what to do." The man went off the train at this point in the conversation, and they were unaware they had left an unknown, sympathetic friend behind. The lady lived alone, without relatives or near friends, and was dependent upon over bills.

tarding the matter, she said: "I am confident that there are hundreds of such wives in the land, women who make kind-hearted wretched by their failure to appreciate what is done for them, or make an effor toward self entertainment.

for Instance.

What One Woman Did. One dissatisfied woman, who had spent twenty years in finding fault with life because it did not give her what she wanted, suddenly made up her mind to study drawing. That was only three years ago. She is now doing most creditable work, besides being thoroughly happy, and making her husband so, with her contentment and cheerfulness. She is already able to beautify her home with efforts of her own, and, instead of wishing the day twice as long. It is the greatest mistake in the world for a woman to wait for other people to entertain her; or to wait for her husband to entertain her.

of every woman. Think of yourself as the one who has something to bestow. Take a mental stock of your possessions; and if you have nothing to bestow, GET IT. Enrich your mind; acquire accomplishments. In the slang parlance of the day, "Get busy." Life was never so rich with opportu-self.

The Busy, Cheerful Woman. The idle, complaining woman will

The busy, cheerful, occupied situated as this woman evidently is, and call. No man can remain in love with a woman who is forever leaning upon him and expecting him to provide entertainment for her. "One woman of my acquaintance, surest ways to keep a man in love is whose husband travels for months at a to show him how capable you are of time, and leaves her entirely alone both entertaining yourself and him at the along the lines of home decoration. She | It is not necessary that you should and pleasure of her husband in his to listen far better than the idie, un-